Grønt nytår

På årets næstsidste dag blev der tid til en gåtur i omegnen. Denne gang valgte vi området omkring herregården Refsnæs nordøst for landsbyen Komdrup i Østhimmerland.

Herregården har formet lokalområdet i mere end syv hundrede år. Der er ingen tvivl om, at livet på herregården har haft stor indflydelse på udvikling af den nærtliggende landsby Komdrup.

Det er fortsat en overraskelse for mig, hvor grønt landskabet er midt i vinterperioden. Stien og markvejen bringer os langs den ene grønne mark efter den anden. Løvtræerne står i vintertilstand uden blade. Det giver stor kontrast til det grønne græs på markerne.

Her på Refsnæs jorde er det måske mere udpræget end andre steder. Herregården producerer græs. Græs, der ender som hø så langt borte som på Færøerne oppe i Nordatlanten. De færøske får gnasker sig her om vinteren mætte i jysk græs.

Green New Year

On the second to last day of the year, it was time for a walk in the surrounding area. This time we chose the landscapes around the manor house Refsnæs northeast of the village of Komdrup in East Himmerland.

The manor has shaped the local area for more than seven hundred years. There is no doubt that life in the manor has had a major influence on the development of the nearby village of Komdrup.

It remains a surprise to me how green the landscape is in the middle of the winter period. The path and the field road take us along one green field after another. The deciduous trees are in their winter condition without leaves. This provides great contrast to the green grass in the fields.

Perhaps the green colour on the land of the manor Refsnæs is more distinct than elsewhere. The manor produces grass. Grass that ends up as hay as far away as in the Faroe Islands up in the North Atlantic Ocean. In the winter, the Faroese sheep is saturated with Jutlandic grass.
