Dette her er for stort!

Mange mennesker, der for første gang besøger Grønland, udtrykker noget i retning af: ”Dette her er for stort!”

Når atlantflyet fra København starter indflyvningen til en af de store lufthavne på verdens største ø, har passagererne udsigt til et landskab, der er overvældende, og som kan virke uendeligt.

Kæmpemæssige fjorde skærer sig vej ind mellem høje bjerge, som de færreste kender navnene på. Den grønlandske indlandsis dækker udsynet helt ud til horisonten, og Jordens krumning står synligt og klar i den tørre luft.

Samtidigt med, at det ekstremt smukke landskab i årstidens farver begejstrer enhver, der elsker natur, skaber denne uendelige vildmark også en form for uro: ”Dette her er for stort!”

I Sydgrønland ligger den store lufthavn i bygden Narsarsuaq. Herfra fortsætter rejsen til de små bosætninger i Kommune Kujalleq. Perspektivet bliver anderledes på denne strækning. Den lokale transport foregår med en lille helikopter. Helikopteren flyver meget lavere nede over bjergtoppene og fjordene.

I vinterperioden når passagerne deres mål ude i bosætningerne, mens solens sidste lys farver bjergsiderne røde.

This is too large!

Many people, who for the first time visit Greenland, express something like: “This is too large!”

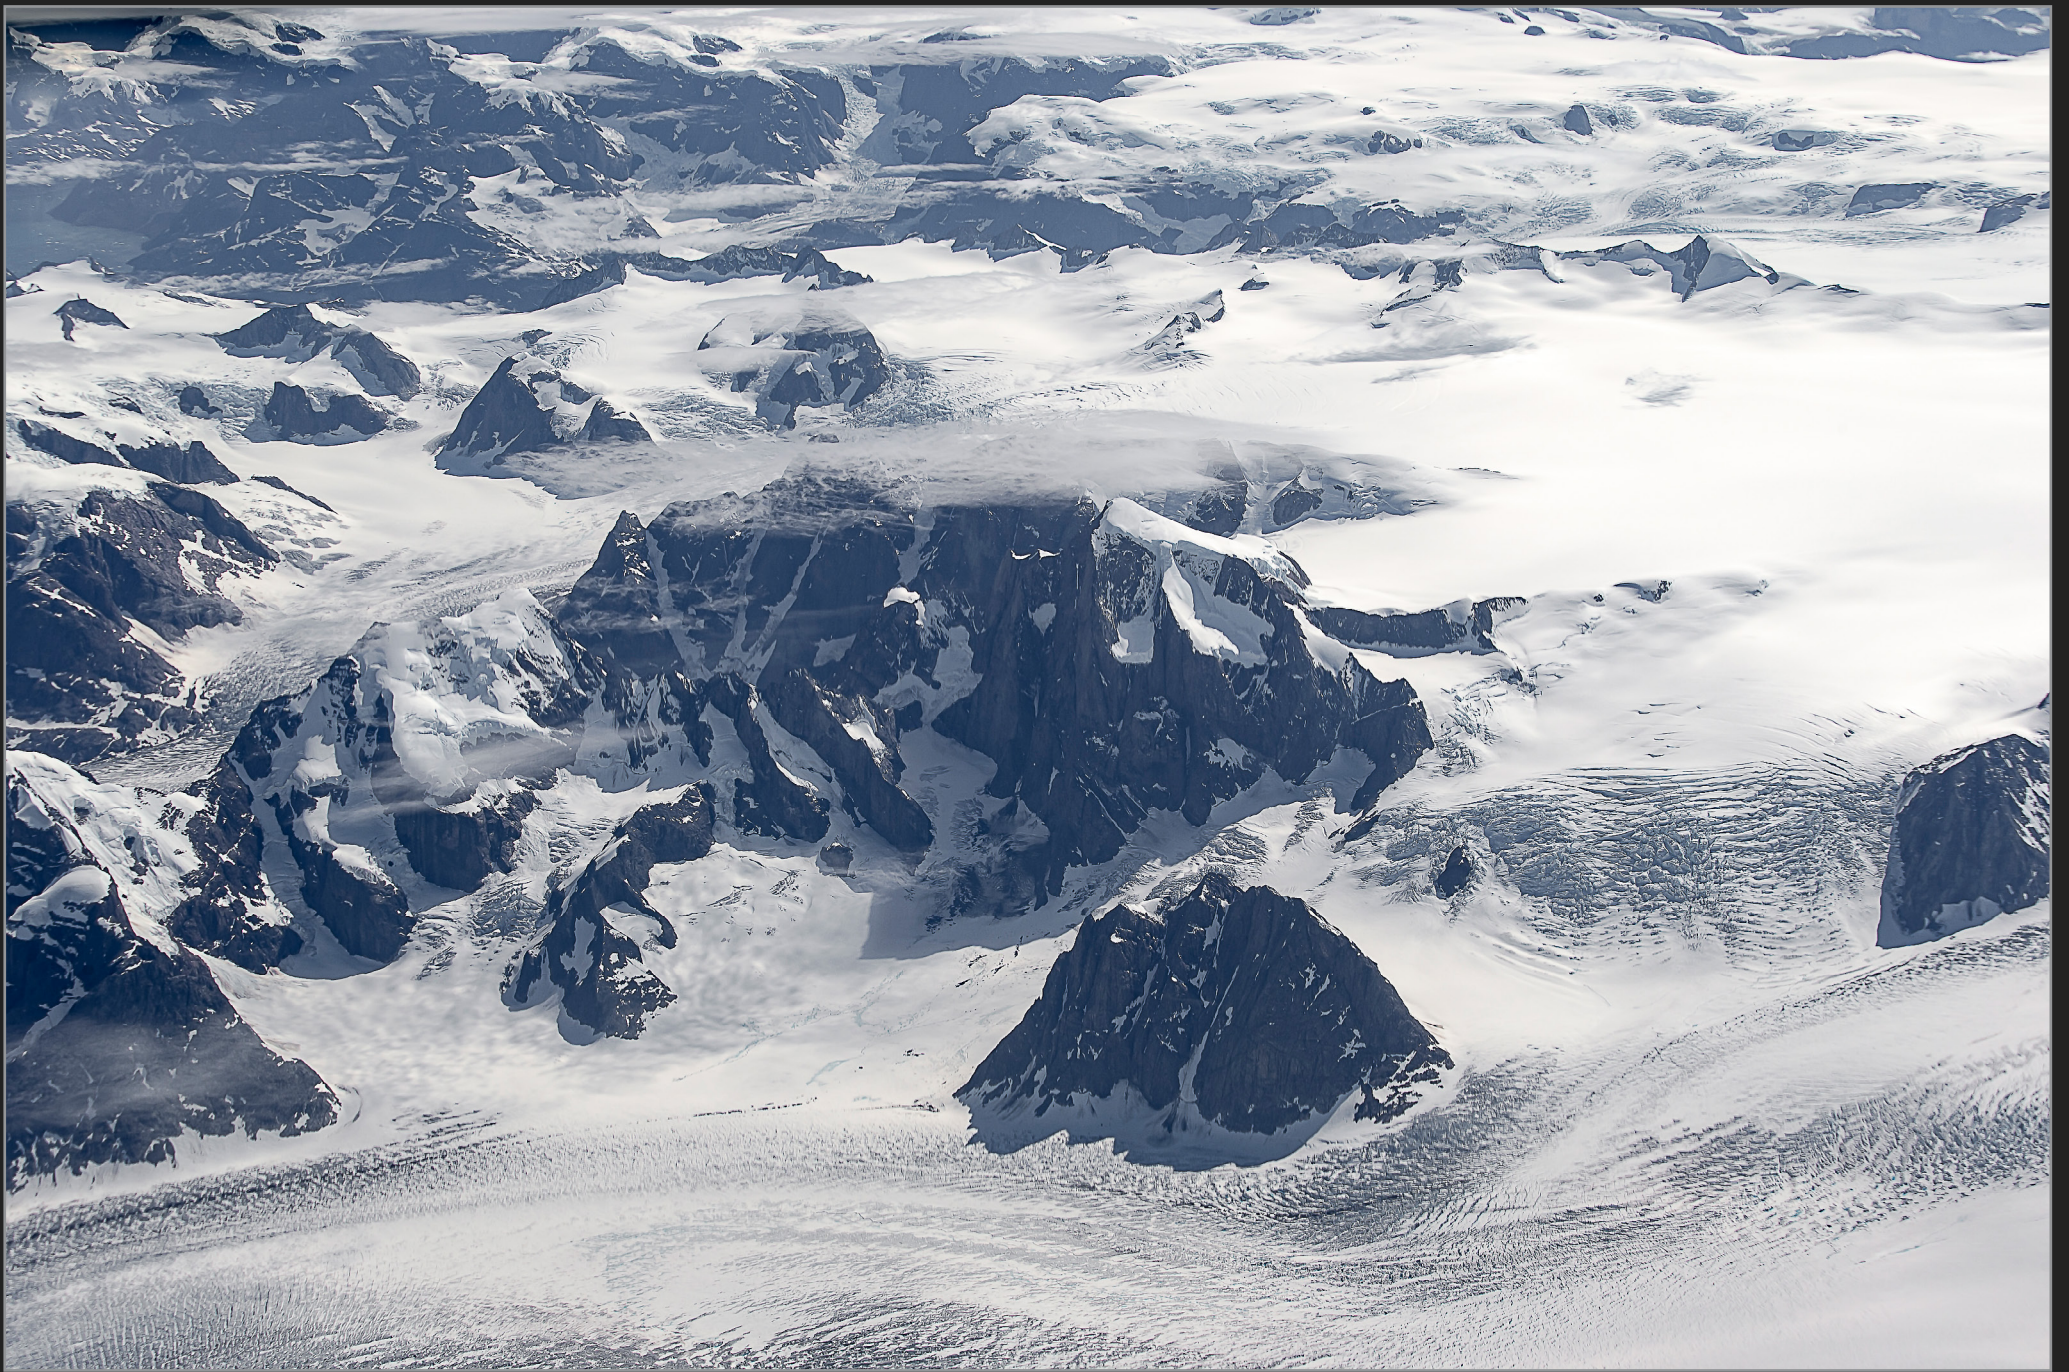

When the airliner from Copenhagen starts approaching one of the major airports on the world’s largest island, the passengers have a view of a landscape, that feels overwhelming and can seem endless.

Huge fjords cut their way in between high mountains, of which only a few know the names. The Greenland Ice Sheet covers the view all the way to the horizon, and curvature of the Earth is visible and clear in the dry air.

While the extremely beautiful landscape in the seasonal colours excites anyone who loves nature, this endless wilderness also creates a kind of turmoil: “This is too large!”

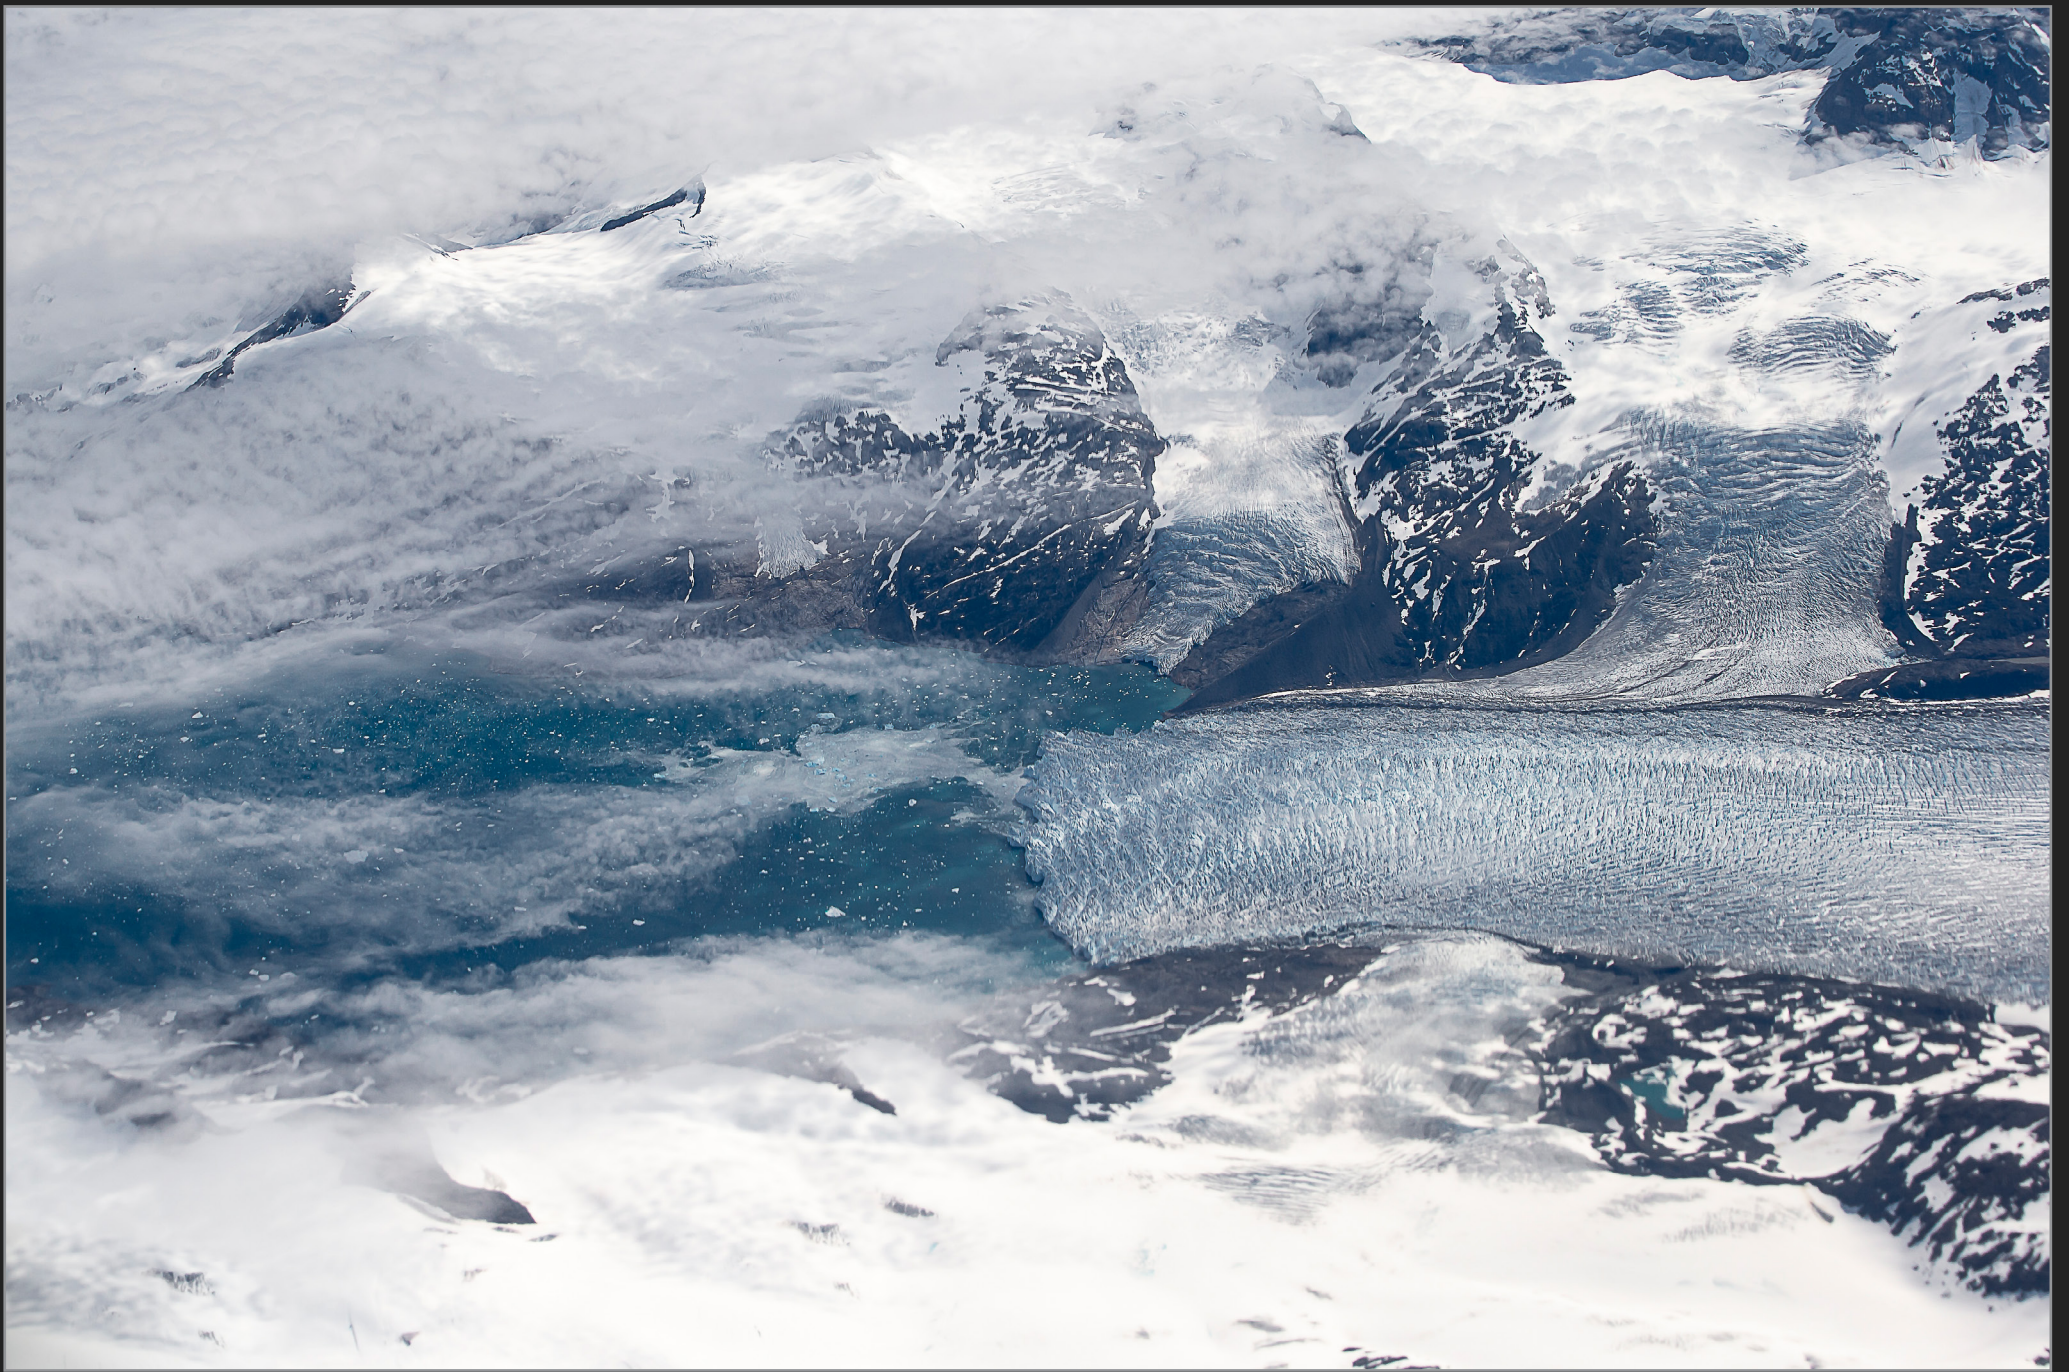

In South Greenland, the large airport is located in the village of Narsarsuaq. From here, the journey continues to the small settlements in the municipality of Kujalleq. The perspective is different on this stretch. The local transport takes place by a small helicopter. The helicopter flies much lower down over the mountain peaks and the fjords.

During the winter period, the passengers reach their destinations in the settlements, while the colour of the sunset colours the mountain sides red.
