Mulbjergene

2004 - 2010

When some small hills are placed surrounded by a flat bog on one side and a flat sea on the other side, then these hills must be named using the Danish word 'bjerg' ('mountains'). Especially when these small hills are located in a country which highest point does not reach a high of two hundred meters.

The Mulbjergene are within sight wherever you are placed in the bog Lille Vildmose. The Mulbjergene, which are moraine hills, form the border between the bog and the Kattegat Sea. The Mulbjergene are partially covered by forest and partially covered with grass where sheep graze. The hills reach a height of 30 to 40 meters above sea level.

At the foot of the Mulbjergene the village Dokkedal is located. In the middle of the village is a depot, where the old crafts and machines which were used in the past exploitation of the bog Lille Vildmose are maintained and displayed for the public.

The Mulbjergene are a good place to start your visit to Lille Vildmose. From the hills there is a good view over the large, flat bog landscape.

The Mulbjergene were during World War 2 used by the German coastal defense military. The remains of the concrete plants can still be found around in the area. Today the area and the nature around The Mulbjergene are designated as an area of outstanding natural beauty.
