Vindens susen i træerne

Mange oplever en travl hverdag, hvor de ikke finder tid til at nyde de små positive, nære ting, der kendetegner vores liv på Jorden. Dagligdagen bliver grå, og livet opleves som en evig gentagelse. Som en maskine, der klarer dagens dont, og hvor den sparsomme resttid anvendes passivt foran et fjernsyn.

Ofte bliver andre mennesker også en grå masse, der virker uinteressant og lidt for normal. Sådan behøver det ikke at være.

I den mørke vinter kan alt blive endnu mere gråt og negativt for mange. Det er oftest selvforskyldt. Disse mennesker lader sig ikke inspirere til at fornemme årets gang omkring dem.

Det er for mig en stor oplevelse at følge med i vinterfuglenes og egernets aktiviteter på foderbrættet. For mig, der i en lang årække har boet i et Arktis uden høje træer, er det vidunderligt at åbne min terrassedør og lytte til vindens sus i de gamle træer, der omgiver mit hus.

Hvornår mon en TV- eller radiokanal laver et program, hvor vi kan lytte til den smukke lyd af vinden i de høje træer?

The song of wind in the trees

A lot of people experience a busy day where they do not find time to enjoy the small positive, near things which characterize our lives on Earth. Everyday life becomes grey and the life is perceived as an everlasting repetition. As a machine that does not meet today's day, and where the sparse time spent passively in front of a television.

Often, other people also become an undistinguished mass which seems uninteresting and a bit too normal. It should not be like that.

In the dark winter everything can become even more drab and negative for many. Usually it is self-inflicted. These people do not let themselves be inspired to sense the passing of the year.

It is a great experience for me to watch the activities of the winter birds and the squirrel on the bird table. For me who lived several years in an Arctic without big trees, it is wonderful to open my terrace door and listen to the song of the wind in the old trees which surround my house.

When does a TV or a radio station make a programme, where we can listen to the beautiful sound of the wind in the tall trees?
